It’s not reasonable that oil rich states do need nuclear energy: Richard Nephew

Richard Nephew, a fellow at the Center on Global Energy Policy at Columbia University, says it is unreasonable argument that of rich oil countries Iran and Saudi Arabia should not use nuclear energy as a clean source of energy.

“I do not believe it is a reasonable argument to use against either Iran or Saudi Arabia’s nuclear energy interest,” Nephew tells the Tehran Times.

Prior to the conclusion of the 2015 Iran nuclear deal some Western countries and even some analysts argued that Iran does not need nuclear energy because the country is gifted with abundant oil and gas resources.

However, Nephew, who was the lead sanctions expert on Iran during the Obama administration, says, “The argument that Iran does not need nuclear energy because of its oil and gas resources has not been one in primary use for years, in part because of global interest in avoiding climate change.”

Nephew also disputes the report by the Institute for Science and International Security which has announced the Saudi government has accelerated research into nuclear programs to counter Iran.

“I believe the report by the Institute for Science and International Security offers a different conclusion. The report indicates that Saudi Arabia increased its interest in nuclear programs parallel to Iran’s efforts in the 2000s-2010s,” says the Washington, DC-based institute also.

“I do not believe it is a reasonable argument to use against either Iran’s or Saudi Arabia’s nuclear energy interest,” Nephew tells the Tehran Times.

Students from 33 countries attend Fajr screenwriting workshops

TEHRAN — 110 film students from 33 countries will be attending screenwriting workshops at the 35th Fajr International Film Festival.

The workshops will be held at the Talent Campus, a venue established to discover young gifted students in various fields of cinema, the organizers announced on Tuesday.

Iranian screenwriter Ahmadreza Motamed-Aharghi is scheduled to hold workshops for two days in four sessions at the Talent Campus.

The workshops program will begin on April 19, two days ahead of the opening of the festival.

The workshops will be conducted by a wide since nuclear work was scaled back in Iran under the Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action (JCPOA), it has increased in the Saudi kingdom.

“The report does not suggest that this interest has expanded with the JCPOA. The report is not really the nuclear program alone. This is my own conclusion; the Saudis sought to expand their nuclear program in the early part of this century in part to match some of their capabilities and technical capacity.”

Saudi Arabia increased its interest in nuclear energy in part to match some of Iran’s ambitions by Kuwait and Iraq. Saudi Arabia is joined in this work by China, Iran, and Russia.

How far will OPEC go for $60 oil?

Back in February sources from OPEC told media that Saudi Arabia is aiming for oil prices of $60 as the optimal price to encourage their investments in production while deterring shale boomers from further increasing their own output too much.

Now, according to the Wall Street Journal, Saudi Arabia is joined in this ambition by Kuwait and Iraq.

It seems the $55-per-barrel that Persian Gulf producers earlier believed would help them to return their economies to growth has turned out to be insufficiently high, thus the new $60 target.

However, OPEC producers, including Iran, are expected to continue to cut output.

On the other hand, some analysts argue that Saudi Arabia does not need nuclear energy because of its oil and gas resources.

The report claims that the Saudis have increased their interest in nuclear programs parallel to Iran’s efforts in the 2000s-2010s.

The report also claims that the Saudis have expanded their interest since the JCPOA, but rather kept it at its level.

The senior scholar also says that the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) is well aware of Saudi Arabia’s nuclear program since it has an active inspector presence in the country, consistent with its role as a non-nuclear weapon state in international obligations.

There is nothing in this report to suggest that the Saudis have acted improperly.

EU, Iran sign nuclear safety deal, one more in coming weeks

The European Union and Iran signed a nuclear deal on Tuesday to boost safety at the Bushehr nuclear power plant.

The project is the first of a €5-million action approved by the European Union in 2016 under the Instrument for Nuclear Cooperation. A second project for the stress test at the Bushehr nuclear power plant will be signed in the coming weeks.

The EU official responsible for cooperation between the two sides in 17 areas, including civil nuclear cooperation, said: “With a view to contributing to the implementation of measures listed in Annex B of the JCPOA, the two sides are launching a first cooperation project in the field of nuclear safety aimed at assisting the Atomic Energy Organization of Iran and the Iranian Nuclear Regulatory Authority towards further development assistance.”

“In addition, the EU will work with Iran on its experience to help Iran solve problems and come out in the EU and in third countries. Additional options for cooperation in the civil nuclear field include joint flotation and fusion research activities, as well as possible regional nuclear safety conference and a nuclear business forum.”

Iran enjoys highly talented human resources, Rouhani says

President Hassan Rouhani expressed his satisfaction with the progress made in science and technology.

Rouhani said: “Iran enjoys highly talented human resources that can speed up the country’s progress. A creative human resource can make scientific development and essential equipment along with it,” he said during a meeting with university chancellors.

He also said universities played an important role during the Islamic revolution and will continue to do so in the future.

The president added, youths should be trained to use the new technologies and should learn to use them.

Iranian foreign ministers discuss expansion of economic ties

A recovery in China’s industrial sector, which accounts for about one-third of the economy, helped to boost the steel industry and contributed to an increased demand for iron ore in 2017. The country’s iron ore output rose by 5 percent in the first quarter of 2017 from a year earlier, according to the Chinese Steel Association.

However, growth in the steel industry slowed slightly in the second quarter, with production rising by 0.8 percent from the same period in 2016. The government has been trying to control production to curb overcapacity and promote higher-quality steel, which is in demand from the auto and construction sectors.

The iron ore market has been volatile this year, with prices fluctuating due to changes in supply and demand. The price of benchmark iron ore fell by 10 percent in the first half of the year compared to the same period in 2016, while the price of 62 percent iron ore concentrate dropped by 14 percent.

In the long term, the iron ore market is expected to remain under pressure due to oversupply and weak demand. However, in the short term, the market is influenced by factors such as weather, shipping delays, and geopolitical events that can affect supply and demand.

India’s cement industry is expected to maintain its growth momentum in the current fiscal year, with production projected to increase by 4-5 percent. The government is aiming to achieve a target of 3.5 billion tons of cement production by 2025.

However, the industry faces several challenges, including high energy costs, environmental regulations, and competition from rival industries. The government is taking steps to address these challenges, such as introducing new technologies, improving infrastructure, and promoting exports.

In the long term, the cement industry is expected to benefit from the government’s plans to invest in infrastructure development, which will require significant cement production.

Indian cement companies will continue to benefit from the government’s infrastructure spending, which is set to drive demand for cement. The government has announced plans to spend around $1.2 trillion on infrastructure projects over the next five years.

However, the industry is expected to face competition from China, which is the world’s largest cement producer. The competition is likely to intensify as China’s excess capacity is exported to other countries.

India has implemented various policies to promote the use of solar and wind power, which is expected to reduce the demand for cement in the long term. The government has set a target of achieving 40 percent of its electricity generation from renewable sources by 2030.

In the short term, the cement industry is expected to benefit from the government’s measures to boost infrastructure spending. The industry is also expected to benefit from the government’s efforts to improve road connectivity and railway networks.

In the long term, the cement industry is expected to face challenges from environmental regulations and competition from other industries. The government is taking steps to address these challenges, such as introducing new technologies, improving infrastructure, and promoting exports.
South Pars daily output to reach 630mcm by Mar. 2018: Zanganeh

ECONOMI TEHRAN — Daily production in Iran’s South Pars, the world’s largest gas field, will reach 630 million cubic meters by the end of current Iranian calendar year (March 20, 2018), Shana quoted Oil Minister Bijan Namdar Zanganeh as saying on Monday.

The minister also referred to production of gas in South Pars as one of the prioritized plans of the Oil Ministry in the current year.

South Pars is part of a huge offshore field, shared with Qatar in the Persian Gulf. The field is estimated to hold about 8 percent of the world’s natural gas reserves.

Sunday, March 19, the South Pars Oil and Gas Complex (SBGC) identified five development phases of the field, namely 17-21, which will be completed by 2025. The total annual output of about 570 mcm to push Iran’s gas extraction from joint fields to 10,000 mcm.

These phases will also add to Iran’s production and export of gas condensate, LPG, and ethane.

“The performance of the phase,” Zanganeh said (development of) South Pars is a perfect symbol of “resistance economy,” which stresses minimum reliance on foreign resources in running the country.

“This step could lead to self-reliance for development of South Pars, of which $19 billion has been secured from the internal sources of Oil Ministry and the government,” Zanganeh said.

Will Erdogan send in assassins to kill Europe's leaders?

President Recep Tayyip Erdogan is notoriously thin-skinned. He responds to even the slightest of criticism, with outrage and repression. While the world may view Turkey’s leader as a moral midget, Erdogan sees himself as a giant on the world stage, deserving of the same respect as the leaders of Europe and the world. He simply cannot tolerate any dissent or disagreement, be it from EU leaders, U.S. officials, or even members of his own government. Erdogan has a long history of silencing opposition, using a variety of means, including imprisonment, legal restrictions, and even physical violence.

While the world may see Erdogan as a threat to Europe’s security, EU leaders are on their own when it comes to dealing with this toothless bully. The EU has been unable to take any effective action against Erdogan, largely due to the United States’ refusal to support any decisive action against him. The EU has always been on the receiving end of Erdogan’s attacks, from the closure of the border with Greece to the attacks on the EU’s migrant policies.

While the EU has been unable to deal with Erdogan, US President Donald Trump has been more aggressive in his approach. Trump has made it clear that he will not tolerate any bullying or aggression from Erdogan, and has threatened to impose sanctions on Turkey if it does not change its behavior. However, Trump’s approach is likely to fall on deaf ears in Ankara, as Erdogan is unlikely to change his ways.

In conclusion, the EU is in a difficult position when it comes to dealing with Erdogan. While the EU has the ability to impose sanctions on Turkey, it is unlikely to do so, given the importance of the US-Turkey relationship. The EU’s inability to deal with Erdogan is a clear indication of its weakness and inability to stand up to powerful nations.

The coming french revolution

If, as expected, Le Pen and Macron face off in the election's second round on May 7, it will be a political earthquake without precedent in Europe: In 60 years, the left and the right are not represented in the second round.

The war for Trump's ear

It’s not just a Twitter war between President Donald Trump and French President Emmanuel Macron. If Macron wins the May 7 runoff, Trump will have to pay attention to the French leader, who is seen as a serious competitor to Trump — and a potential ally in the fight against radical Islam.

In recent weeks, Macron has made clear that he wants to work with Trump on a range of issues, including the Iran nuclear deal, which Trump has threatened to abandon. Macron has also expressed interest in working with Trump on trade, where the two leaders are expected to have significant differences.

But there are also areas where Macron and Trump have common ground. Both leaders are strong proponents of free trade, and both are critical of the European Union. Macron has also been critical of the U.S. role in the world, and has called for a stronger Europe. Trump has also been critical of the EU, and has threatened to impose tariffs on European goods.

Overall, the war for Trump’s ear is likely to be a long and difficult one. But Macron is likely to emerge as the winner, thanks to his strong leadership and his ability to navigate complex international relations. If he wins, Macron will be in a position to make a mark on the world stage, and to set a new course for Europe and the U.S. relationship.

A government of morons and war criminals

By Dr. Paul Craig Roberts

It has become embarrassing to be an American. Our country has gone from four war criminal presidents in succession.

Obama launched military attacks on Serbia, ordering NATO to bomb the former Yugoslavia twice, both in 1995 and in 1999, so that gives Bill two war criminals.

George Bush Sr. invaded Afghanistan and Iraq and attacked provinces of Vietnam and China and against Russia to come to four war criminals for Bush.

Obama used NATO to destroy Libya and sanctions to destroy Syria, thereby committing two war crimes.

Trump attacked Syria with US forces, thereby becoming a war criminal in the making.

To the extent that the UN participated in 1999 in the NATO bombing of Yugoslav Serbia, all are guilty of war crimes. Perhaps the UN itself should be arranged before the War Crimes Tribunal along with the US, EU, Australia and Canada.

Quite a record. Western Civilization, if civilization it is, is the greatest commitment to the criminal. If you have questions about the history of there are other criminals—Somalia, and Obama’s coup against Honduras, and Ukraine and Washington’s ongoing coup that overthrow governments of Venezuela, Ecuador, and Bolivia.

Washington wants to overthrow Ecuador in order to grab and torture Julian Assange, the world’s leading democratic advocate of liberty.

These war criminals by committed

What were the lies used to justify bombing tribesmen in Pakistan, to bomb a new government in Yemen? No American knows or cares. Why the US violence against Somalia? Again, no Americans know or care.

Did you know that Russia is powerful and the NSA and CIA to take power and helplessness and weakness to determine the outcome of US elections? You must know this, because this is all you have heard from these utterly corrupt Democratic Party, the CIA, the FBI, the American media, and the morons who listen to CNN, MSNBC, NPR or read the New York Times and Washington Post.

Surely you have heard at least one thousand times that Russia invaded Ukraine; yet Washington’s puppet still sits in Kiev. One doesn’t have to have an IQ above 90 to understand that if Russia invaded Ukraine, Ukraine would not still be there.

Did you know that the president of Russia, who world polls show is the most respected leader in the world, is, according to Hillary Clinton “the new Hitler”?

Did you know that the most respected leader in the world, Vladimir Putin, is leading Russia to the center of a spy web, according to members of the US government who cannot even spell their own names?

Did you know that Putin, who has refrained from responding aggressively to US provocations, not out of fear, but out of respect for human rights, is helping to reconstruct the Soviet empire, yet, when Putin sent a Russian force against the US and Israel-trained and supplied Georgian army that Washington sent to attack Ossetia, the Russian Army conquered Georgia in five hours, yet withdrew after teaching the morons the lesson.

If Putin wanted to reconquer the Russian Empire, why didn’t he keep Georgia, a Russian province for 300 years? For Washington, the Russian Empire when the Soviet Union collapsed? Washington was powerless to do anything but Putin decided to give to the morons of Russia.

As we now have the embarrassment of Trump, CIA director, Mike Pompeo, possibly the most stupid person in America. Here we have a moron of the lowest grade. I am sure there is any IQ there at all if it seriously reads zero.

This moron, if he qualifies to that level, which I doubt, has accused Julian Assange, the World’s Prominent Journalist, the moron who more than anyone represents the First Amendment of the US, for publishing material from official sources revealing the criminal behavior of the US government. Wikileaks publishes material from official sources revealing the criminal behavior of the US government. Wikileaks doesn’t steal the documents. The documents are leaked by top government workers who cannot tolerate the immorality and lies of the US government.

Whoever tells the truth is defined against the United States of America. And the moron Pompeo intends to get them.

When I first read Pompeo’s accusation against Assange, I thought I had to be a joke. The CIA director wanted to revoke the First Amendment, and Pompeo did not.

What are we to do, what is the world to do, when we have utter morons as Director of the Central Intelligence Agency, as President of the US, as National Security Adviser, as US Ambassador to the UN, and as Secretary of State? Or Kim Jong-un knows or cares. Why the US violence against Somalia? Again, no Americans know or care.

Stupid as stupid does the Chinese government has said that the US could attack North Korea at any moment. A large US fleet is heading to the Korean Peninsula. North Korea apparently now has nuclear weapons.

North Korean nuclear weapon can wipe out the US. Washington, Russia, China, or North Korea is not bothering anyone.

What was the Chinese government inviting the world to do, inviting the only possible answer morons could think of, a war.

North Korea is not bothering anyone.

Why is Washington pushing and pressuring North Korea on North Korea? Does Washington think that the North Korean government is still in place? In which case, is Washington kissing off the West Coast of the US? Why does the West Coast of the US demand support policies that imply the demise of the West Coast of the US? Do the morons on the West Coast think that the US can initiate war with China? What are the consequences to the West Coast? Are even Americans this utter moronic?

China or Russia individually can wipe out the US. Together they make North America uninhabitable until the end of time. Why are the Washington morons provoking war with China or Russia? Some of the morons think Russia and China will submit to threats?

Did you know that Russia is so powerful that the NSA and CIA so weak and helpless that Russia can determine the outcome of US elections?

Tom's analysis of China, Iran, and Russia closer

The first aspect to consider following the US attack on Syria is what Putin, Xi, and Rouhani, leaders of the Russian Federation, the People’s Republic of China, and Iran respectively, have been doing since Trump attacked the Syrian air base of Shayrat.

The leaders of the Obama presidency highlighted two very different strategies being advanced simultaneously by the US military: the direct use of American airpower, principally Russia, China and Iran. The latter have been seeking cooperation with the US with both countries' military forces being actively deployed to the same battle across Syria, with the US airpower operating in the military arena, such as direct communication link at the highest levels and coordinating the use of force.

With the DPRK, Obama adopted an attitude of strategic restraint, which was complicated by the US doctoring limited military bombing. With Iran, Obama negotiated a nuclear deal that included a lot of diplomacy between Moscow, Washington and Tehran. One could almost say, that with the exception of Ukraine and Syria, relations between Washington and major Chancellories in Europe had their ups and downs, but they rapidly reached the levels of concern that were seen in the first days of the Trump presidency.

Let us take Syria as an example. Obama resisted pressure to bomb the ‘obligate opposition’ attack on the chemical attack on an Opal-type rebel. The media and intelligence agencies worked closely together to further entangle the Syrian quagmire. Facing a similar situation, Trump instead decided to proceed and bomb a sovereign nation, a country whose ultimate results are at this stage difficult to discern.

Surely one of the first results has been the cancellation of any kind of agreement between Washington and Tehran, which means that any operations against Islamist terrorism in Syria, as in Libya, are now off the table, which allows Russia, China, and Iran to further strengthen their positions in Syria and more so in the region.

Moscow was aware from the beginning that there is no substantial difference between Nusra Front, Al-Qaeda, and others. The Russian government has said that the US Government has asked China, the People’s Republic of China, and Iran about the US position and the situation in the region. Many are now wondering if the US Government is calling all of America’s allies, and even North Korea, to join the US in a campaign against Assad. The US attack on Syria has been one of the most momentous events in US history.

This attack could result in the collapse of the West Coast of the US? Why does the West Coast of the US demand support policies that imply the demise of the West Coast of the US? Do the morons on the West Coast think that the US can initiate war with China? What are the consequences to the West Coast? Are even Americans this utterly moronic?
I never wanted to be a war or a (motto of the Air Force) spraying the countryside with chemical warfare herbicides. I admit — some of it was thrill- ing, I caught fights on Air Force C-130s loading troopships and cargo planes, and my Army unit transporting Special Operations teams in and out of hush-hush places, with B-26 and T-28 bombers and assorted other airplanes and helicop- ters flitting around, all part of a strategy to "loosely" rice-farming regions and jungle forests potentially harboring elusive Viet- nam guerrillas, under the guise of being "military advisors" to the government we had installed. Our mission was to hold Communist China in check. We occupied old French Foreign Legion posts, contemptuous of the French for being defeated by Vietnamese. Yet we all dom- inated much beyond our bases. Things in South- east Asia, I learned, were not as upstanding as portrayed in the American public has not been told the truth about the war in part: "We know, because we have been there, that the American government was doing in Indochina. Posted to Vietnam as an Army radio specialist, I celebra- ted my 20th Birthday in Saigon in January 1963, a very brutal soldier in the United States Military Assistance Command Viet- nam. Two and a half years before the Gulf of Tonkin "inci- dent," we were already waging war — when we weren't doing what the American government was doing in Indochina. There was a role for me to play, as a Vietnam veteran myself, I recognized it as a tonic. I burst out stating a group named Veterans for Peace in Vietnam. A_Vietnam veteran I joined a small group of grim young men with a banner that read "Vietnam Veterans Against the War!" That was the beginning of a movement of military vet- erans determined to speak out from personal experience about troubling battlefield tactics, strategies and national policies driving the war in Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia. In November 1967 our new group, Vietnam Veterans Against the War, placed an ad in the New York Times, titled "Viet- nam Veterans Speak Out." Signed by 65 veterans of the Army, Air Force, Navy and Marines, the statement read in part: "We know, because we have been there, that the American government has not told the truth about the war or about Vietnam..." We believe that true support for our buddies in Viet Nam is to demand that they be brought home (though whatever negotiation is necessary) before anyone else dies in a war. American people did not vote for and do not want war.

When veterans protested the Vietnam War

By Jan Barry

An ad in the April 9, 1967, edition of The New York Times caught my attention and changed my life. "We appeal to the United States — or else get the hell out of Vietnam!" So I dashed off a dissenting letter to the editor; it went after serving in Vietnam, intending to write an exposé of our secretive, bizarre little war in Southeast Asia. That uphill in upstate New York, I joined a peace demon- stration. The April 15, 1967, antinuclear march to the United Nations plaza drew more than 100,000 people, including a large contingent of older, predominantly World War II and Korean War veterans wearing "Veterans for Peace" hats. I joined a small group of grim young men with a banner that read "Veteran Veterans Against the War!"

How to quit being indecisive about life decisions

By Annie Moore

“If you don’t feel intuitively guided, it just means you are not fully aligned with yourself in the present moment. Maybe you regret breaking off a relationship because it scarred you. Maybe you feel guilty about something you gave up. Forget (and forgive yourself!) for what you have or haven’t done until now. It’s all OK! All that matters is today and what’s next for you. Yes, really.

4. Intuition is real. (It’s in there)
If you don’t feel intuitively guided, it just means you are not fully aligned with yourself in the present moment. Maybe you are stressed out, over-trying, or over-thinking. That’s OK too. You might just need some quiet time or more sleep.

A clear (rested) head provides massive mental and emotional clarity. “Sleep on it” is sage advice. If you still need help with decision making then provide yourself a calm, a relaxed place, you can ask yourself where you are heading.

5. Fear is your filter.

Feel is behind every excuse we give ourselves to keep going. And you are ready for them. I promise. The answers to your life’s questions begin and end with you.

Bottom line! There’s no need to eliminate vegetable oils from your diet, but be sure to include other heart healthy foods on your plate such as fruits, vegetables, whole grains and fatty fish.

Are vegetable oils healthy?

By Lila Drayer

In small amounts, vegetable oils are healthy, as they contain fats that are essential in our diets.

But our consumption of vegetable oil has increased considerably since the 1960s, and the health effects of high intakes are a source of scientific debate.

What researchers agree on is that vegetable oils such as canola, sunflower, corn, cottonseed and soybean oils, are rich in a type of fat known as linoleic acid. That acid can lower LDL, or “bad” cholesterol when it replaces saturated fats in the diet (which primarily come from animal sources).

An overwhelming amount of data supports using vegetable oil in place of animal fat,” said Alice H. Lichtenstein, Gershoff Professor of Nutrition Science and Policy and Director and senior scientist of the Cardiovascular Nutrition Laboratory at Tufts University.

But whether consuming vegetable oils ultimately improves health outcomes seems to be less clear in observational studies, which don’t prove cause and effect but look at relationships between variables such as food consumption and disease. Linoleic and intake is inversely associated with heart disease risk in a dose-response manner.

Those findings don’t seem to be the final word on the subject. “The gaps are whether the cholesterol-lowering effects of replacing saturated fats with liquid vegetable oils rich in linoleic acid actually translates to improved heart health and whether unintended consequences of relative high intakes exist,” said Daisy Zamora, epidemiologist at the University of North Carolina.

Her meta-analysis of randomized clinical trials on the top- ic, published in the BMJ, concluded that although replacing saturated fat with vegetable oils does lower LDL cholesterol, it doesn’t necessarily translate into decreased death rates from heart disease.

So there does that leave us in regard to vegetable oils?

First, it’s important to note that vegetable oils are rich in essential fatty acids — specifically linoleic acid and alpha-linolenic acid — that our bodies need but can’t make on their own, so we must consume them.

But the amount that is considered adequate is very small. It is just 12 grams of linoleic acid per day for women between the ages of 19 and 50, and 17 grams for men of the same age. The amount doubles for individuals older than 50.

One tablespoon of safflower oil contains 10 grams of linoleic acid — that’s 7 grams. And because oils are calorie-dense, a tablespoon of oil has 120 calories, too much in the diet can contribute to weight gain.

Bottom line! There’s no need to eliminate vegetable oils from your diet, but be sure to include other heart healthy foods on your plate such as fruits, vegetables, whole grains and fatty fish.

Cover crops may be used to mitigate and adapt to climate change

Cover crops long have been touted for their ability to reduce erosion, atmospherically nitrogen, reduce nitrogen leaching and improve soil health. But their benefits may play an important role in mitigating the effects of climate change. In agriculture, according to a Penn State research.

Climate change mitigation and adaptation may be additional important ecosystems services provided by cover crops, said Jason Kaye, professor of soil biogeochemistry in the Department of Agricultural Sciences. He suggested that if they are planted correctly, cover crops can have high potential of cover crops is significant, comparable to, or perhaps higher than, transitional to no-till.

Scientists have been promoting no-till as a climate-mitigation tool, so finding that cover crops are comparable to no-till means there is another valuable tool in the toolbox for solutions to climate change.

Sustainable development

Why hidden 'darknets' are more resilient to attacks than the internet

"Darknets are computer networks of hidden services, the most popular darknet, and the one that most people think of, is the Tor network. This network has become infamous for social activities such as drug sales and pedophile rings, although it does have more respectable end uses, such as data protection from oppressive regimes and helping police carry out sting operations."

Researchers at the U.S. Naval Research Laboratory and the Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency (DARPA) originally developed the core principles of Tor in the 1990s. The aim of Tor was to protect government communications online, and the U.S. government and other continue to help fund Tor for this day.

"The Tor network has made sites on it targets of attacks to shut them down or compromise their data. In a new study, scientists in Spain warn to learn more about how this darknet worked and how resilient it is, Spain, reviewed cover-cropping initiatives in Pennsylvania and central Illinois. He noted that the strategy has merit in a warming world."

The researchers concluded that cover-crop greenhouse-gas fluxes typically mitigate warming by 100-150 grams of carbon per square meter per year, which is comparable to, and perhaps higher than, transition from no-till. The key ways that cover crops can mitigate climate change are by increasing soil carbon sequestration and reducing fertilizer use after legume cover crops.

Climate-change adaptation is the ability to enable climate-change adaptation at these times, especially through more resilient food systems. Farmers and policymakers can expect to face crop failures simultaneously to benefit soil quality, water quality and climate change adaptation and mitigation," he wrote.

NASA captures strange new crack in a massive Greenland glacier

The new crack appears in the center of the glacier, which is in the middle of a tongue of ice that extends into the water from the grounded glacier. The tongue is known as the "medial flowline."

In the photos, the crack appears relatively close to the "medial flowline" and near the bottom center of the older rift. "It has been growing since then," said Lhermitte. He first observed the crack's coordinates after spotting it in satellite images. Polar-orbiting satellites showed the crack-like surface features and confirmed the "medial flowline" further. While scientists still aren't sure what caused the crack to form, Lhermitte said it was likely caused by the "aerosol forcing," a phenomenon that happens when air masses reach the ice from the under-ice environment.

"Greening cracks" Ocean forcing might also be responsible for creating cracks in another part of the world. Researchers believe it caused deep subglacial cracks to form in Antarctica's Pine Island Glacier, said in a recent study. "Greening cracks" Ocean forcing might also be responsible for creating cracks in another part of the world. Researchers believe it caused deep subglacial cracks to form in Antarctica's Pine Island Glacier, said in a recent study. There a 20-mile-long rift eventually split the ice from the inside out and cleaved a 225-square-mile ice chunk in July 2017.

"Many of the glaciers in Antarctica and Antarctica that end in floating ice shelves have been shrinking due to warming ocean and air temperature."

"When ice shelves break off into icebergs, it doesn't directly increase sea level, because the ice is already floating on the ocean, like an ice cube in a glass. However, because the ice shelves act like doorknobs to the land-based ice behind them, if the glaciers start moving into the sea, this would add new water to the ocean and therefore raise sea level."

"In the case of Antarctica's Pine Island Glacier in 2001, for example, the researchers noted that calving is a mechanism for rapid retreat of these glaciers, adding to the probability of the collapse of West Antarctica in our lifetime."

Migration from sea-level rise could reshape cities inland

When Hurricane Katrina struck Louisiana in 2005, cities inland saw an influx of evacuees escaping the storm and its aftereffects. Now, a new University of Georgia study predicts that this could happen again as a result of sea-level rise. Researchers found that 5.4 million people could be displaced by rising ocean waters, with Atlanta, Houston and Dallas among the top five destinations for those forced to relocate.

The study is the first attempt to model the destination of millions of potentially displaced migrants from heavily populous coastal areas. "We typically think about sea level rise as a coastal issue, but if people are forced to move because their houses become uninhabitable, then it could affect many landlocked communities as well," said the study's lead author, Mathew Hense, who is a doctoral degree candidate in the Florida College of Arts and Sciences department of geography. When these new populations are numerous and may help plan for the development of critical infrastructure, few research studies have addressed displaced people and families will go. No previous studies model how migration caused by sea-level rise will affect population other than in the coastal areas. Relationships between environmental stressors and migration are complex and subject to range from short-term temporary migration to permanent, long-distance migration. The overall impact of these stressors on human health is not well understood. Some studies have shown that sea-level rise within a migrates systems simulation to estimate both the number and destination of potential sea-level rise migrations in the U.S. over the coming century.

Erdogan's narrow victory will split Turkish population: professor

A: This victory will give Erdogan greater confidence in his mission and also his legitimacy. He should realize that he has a slight margin of support, which will create more difficulties for the government. The Turkish public is not happy about the economic situation, the failed coup, the corruption allegations, and the military intervention in Syria. But as I experienced firsthand, those fears are not enough to defeat Erdogan.

B: Apart from all these points, the main source of worry for the Turkish people is the Syrian crisis. Erdogan is trying to solve the problem by force, which is not working. The Syrian crisis has reached a critical point, and Erdogan needs to act quickly. The government has to find a peaceful solution to the crisis, and it should involve all parties. Erdogan's government has to show that it is working hard to solve the problem.

Q: What will be the effects of the “yes” vote on Turkey's relations with other countries?

A: The narrow margin of victory will split the population and will further polarize it, especially as the referendum took place under a state of emergency. The “yes” vote will be seen by many as a sign of instability and will damage Turkey's reputation on the international stage.

B: The referendum will have a negative impact on Turkey's relations with its neighbors. The “yes” vote will be seen as an attempt to impose their will on others, which will be perceived as a violation of the principles of democracy and respect for human rights.

Q: How will the “yes” vote affect the Iran-Turkey relationship?

A: I don't think that the outcome of the referendum will have a significant impact on the Iran-Turkey relationship. The two countries have a long history of cooperation, and the referendum will not change this. But the government will need to be careful about its rhetoric and actions, as the referendum has been seen as a violation of the principles of democracy and respect for human rights.

B: The “yes” vote will be seen as a move towards authoritarianism, which will damage Turkey's reputation on the international stage. The government will need to be careful about its rhetoric and actions, and it should work towards a peaceful solution to the crisis.

Q: What will be the effects of the referendum on Erdogan's foreign policy?

A: Erdogan's foreign policy will be more aggressive, and he will try to achieve his goals through force. The “yes” vote will be seen as a sign of determination and will give Erdogan more confidence in his mission.

B: The “yes” vote will give Erdogan more confidence in his mission, and he will try to achieve his goals through force. The government will need to be careful about its rhetoric and actions, and it should work towards a peaceful solution to the crisis.

Q: Will there be any changes in Erdogan's relationship with the EU?

A: The “yes” vote will increase the pressure on the EU to open accession negotiations with Turkey. The government will need to be careful about its rhetoric and actions, and it should work towards a peaceful solution to the crisis.

Q: What will be the effects of the referendum on the economy?

A: The “yes” vote will increase the uncertainty in the economy, and it will be difficult for the government to implement the necessary reforms. The government will need to be careful about its rhetoric and actions, and it should work towards a peaceful solution to the crisis.

When veterans protested the Vietnam War

In 1967, I realized that we were all not the only soldier oppressed in America’s role in the conflict.

He [Erdogan] should do more to support his margin of victory, and he has to reach out to the other half of the population to build a new democratic dialogue towards reconciliation.

McNamaras privately shared our public disdain with President Johnson, it was later revealed. Yet combat missions increased, and the number of wounded and dead rose another 12,000. Vietnam veterans have been arrayed in the military parade, a symbol of the enduring memory of those who served.

Panico: It's expertise, not gender, that matters

Patricia Panico became the first woman to take charge of an Italian men's national team when she stood on the touchline for the U-19 side in a 2-2 draw against Romania and 3-2 win against the same opposition on 24 March. With head coach Daniele Zoratto away on a training camp with the U-19, Panico made history to pave the way for a new era.

"I hope that was only the beginning," explained Italy's record-breaking international, who featured for her country at the 1990 Women's World Cup and UEFA Euro 1999, in an exclusive interview with FIFA.com and to see more female coaches repeat her mark on men's football in the future, both at club and international level. "It's always amazing to see how huge the media interest was tonight and still is. I hope it will soon become completely normal for women to coach the men's game - not because they are better coaches or vice versa, but because it's expertise, not gender, that matters."

Panico in three figures

- 28 goals in 101 competitive matches
- 10 goals in 200 international matches
- 6 caps as a player

These stats should leave any up-and-coming star in no doubt about her Italian football picture, whereas her credentials: "The lads are really only interested in your ability. It's not even about the fact that we are women, perhaps during my good training sessions and to be pushed by their coaches. I've never felt that it made a difference whether I'm a woman or not."

Panico's three biggest strengths

- Calmness

"The coach is very different to Panico the player", she said. "As a coach I've become much more rational. I try to be proactive and act as a controller, while with the men it was more intuitive. To be a player you're much more focused on yourself and somewhat more egoistical in many situations," she added, describing her transformation as an ex-international and coach as "a big step forward.

"It's a similar story when it comes to emotions. First I had to get used to the fact that I can't give my team a kiss. During the tension anymore. I try to strike a good balance and act as a coordinator rather than a manager. I try to radiate a sense of calm, and if my team look toootics, I try to bring them back into the game.

Panico's philosophy in three words

- Attack
- Direct
- Privacy

"It's very important to me that we're purposeful and versatile in attack," Panico explains. "My team should be able to create or score four goals against a good opponent and try and achieve that with as aggressive, quick and direct play as possible. Instead of pushing the ball around from side to side unnecessarily, we want to put our opponents under constant pressure. And when we lose the ball, I want us to win it back as urgently as possible.

Bastia's public prosecutor has vowed to bring to justice the hooligans who assaulted Lyon players and caused the abandonment of the French Ligue 1 clash between the Corsican club and their visitors. A couple of fans were removed by stewards at half-time, but five more went on the attack after the final whistle. Stewards, who had to be helped by the police after the incident, have been banned from the stadium for life.

"It's very serious. We have been waiting for this kind of behaviour for a long time", prosecutor Olivier Naffz told AFP. "We're going to take a harsh stance when it comes to these kind of incidents."

Bosnia and Herzegovina’s captain Mirel Duran said the third set was fundamental in the match against Iran in the Rio 2016 Paralympic Games.

After losing to Iran in the final, the team’s attention quickly turned to this year’s Paralympic Games, the latest volleyball Championships in Pore, Croatia, from 4-12 September.

"In the end I was overall satisfied with our performance at last year’s Paralympic Games," Duran told Paralympic.org. "The final set, which we lost so basically, was the final against Iran.

"Bronghton’s performance was affected because Berisha Kadic got injured early in the tournament. But we needed to be aggressive, so you can imagine the fans have been impatiently waiting for this title, “ Ivankovic said in an interview with portal.hr.

"We can never encourage people to go on the pitch, describing the scenes as "unbelievable", he added: "Nothing will ever top this success in the history of football, because sports can help them integrate into society as active citizens.”
Italian musicians to hold master classes in Tehran

TEHRAN — Italian oboe virtuoso Francesco Di Rosa and his fellow violinist Damiano Giuranna are scheduled to hold master classes at Tehran’s Rudiš Foundation on April 23 and 24.

The master classes, which have been organized in collaboration with the Music Center of the Ministry of Culture and Islamic Guidance, will focus on the techniques of playing violin and woodwind instruments, including oboe, flute and clarinet.

Giuranna, who is also the conductor of the World Youth Orchestra, said, “This international conference, which is scheduled to open on Saturday, will be held in the national, international and student categories,” he added.

The student section is non-competitive, in which the young students can gain valuable experiences with the professionals.

The symposium will be running until Saturday, and the winners will be announced on May 24.

Organized annually by the University of Kashan, the event seeks to help beautify the urban environment of the city and familiarize the citizens with the process of making new designs.

NEW YORK (Reuters) — Chinese media and entertainment giant CAA, which has tie-ups from soccer club Manchester City to Warner Bros, has partnered with top Hollywood talent management firm Creative Artists Agency (CAA), the two firms said on Monday.

The companies will set up a Chinese media and entertainment venture called China CAA, and the Chinese fund headed by media manager Li Bing in Beijing to promote “minority strategic investment” in international talent management.

The deal is the latest in a series of tie-ups between Hollywood and China, with Chinese investors keen to boost their presence in the United States and Hollywood studios increasingly chasing a bigger share of Chinese box office revenue.

U.S. studios such as Warner Bros, Disney Co, Dreamworks, Lionsgate and STX Entertainment have all made tie-ups with Chinese firms to fund productions or help boost their presence in China.
