Rouhani says Iran will take next step to limit nuclear commitments

Iran's supreme leader said on Wednesday that Iran would take the next step to limit its nuclear commitments under the 2015 agreement unless the US and other parties that still remain in the deal respect it.

The International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) last month said Iran was in breach of its commitments under the 2015 deal, which aimed to curb Tehran's enrichment of uranium and reprocessing of nuclear materials in return for lifting sanctions.

A day earlier, Iran's Oil Minister said Iran would allow inspections by the International Energy Agency (IEA) to monitor its nuclear facilities.

The US, under President Donald Trump, left the 2015 deal in 2018 and began imposing new sanctions on Iran, which视作为对美国单方面退群行为的回应。The US, under President Donald Trump, left the 2015 deal in 2018 and began imposing new sanctions on Iran, which视作为对美国单方面退群行为的回应。

Facebook admits it listed to users' audio messages

Facebook has admitted it listed users' audio messages sent between users in an attempt to improve its voice recognition system.

The leading social network announced on Tuesday that it was stopping the practice, which was introduced in April 2016, to improve its voice recognition system. The company had recently been the focus of multiple investigations into privacy-related issues.

The move follows a report by The Wall Street Journal that Facebook had been recording audio conversations between users since 2015 to improve its voice recognition system.

The company said it had stopped the practice after learning about a privacy breach.

Facebook's decision comes amid a broader trend of tech companies turning to voice recognition as a way to improve user experience and automate tasks.

Gulf nations, UAE, reportedly, are no longer satisfied with a slow process of normalizing ties with Iran that has been underway since the 2016 nuclear deal, which lifted most sanctions on Iran.

A large number of future festivals in the region and around the world will be held in Iran, including the Tehran International Film Festival, which is considered the birthplace of the film festival in the region.
