Antithesis of justice? Khashoggi verdict roundly condemned

A Saudi court ruling over the state-sponsored assassination of Jamal Khashoggi has drawn outrage across the political spectrum, including from a number of states, international groups and even some Americans. In a decree that dismissed charges against top Saudi officials, the court found Khashoggi’s killer, Majed Turki bin Nasser, partly guilty of the state-sponsored murder, and cleared the Saudi crown prince, Mohammed bin Salman, of any liability.

The Indian critics say the law undermines the country’s secular unity and increases the ethnic divide. The Indian citizenship law is likely to fuel the debate over citizenship law.

The US President announced his investigation, but he insisted that the US would not waive trade or diplomatic ties with Riyadh, regardless of the murder verdict.

The disappearance of Khashoggi received a fair amount of attention in the global media and on social media, and the case was also the subject of a film that was released shortly afterward.

Tehran’s rejection of Reuters’ claim of more than 1,000 people killed during less than two weeks of unrest across Iran is “a real triumph” for the Islamic Republic of Iran, the government said on Wednesday.

From Nuclear to NewClear

Tehran — Paul J. Pillar, a retired CIA officer who has said U.S. foreign policy towards Iran needs a major change in its strategy, has said that hints of such change have already emerged.

In a speech published on The National Interest, Pillar observed that the nuclear deal, also known as the JCPOA, was motivated by the administration of Barack Obama with the accord.

“If the U.S. administration wants more out of Iran, it will have to agree to more of what Iran wants,” Pillar said, the author of Why America Misunderstands the World.

He argued that the Islamic Republic has responded to the U.S. policy of maximising pressure with its own policy of minimising the damage it has suffered.

Iran, Iraq, and Oman: Major Export Destinations of Iran’s Dairy Products

ECONOMY TEHRAN – Iran’s dairy and livestock industries are among the major export destinations of Iran’s dairy products, according to a report of a senior government official in a press conference on Monday.

According to the head of Food and Agriculture Office (FAO) Dr. Mohamad Jamzad, a group of Iranian diplomats have recently attended a meeting with officials of a European country about an increase in the import of Iranian dairy products, especially from Iran.

The official further put the country’s annual dairy products output at seven million tons and said that this figure is 430,000 tons valued at $77.1 million are active in dairy industry in Iran. He also said that some 120,000 persons have direct jobs while another 1.4 million have indirect jobs in the dairy and livestock industries in Iran. The government, however, has limited space to boost this sector due to the economic challenges and political sanctions.

Analysts at the CBI have said that the EU is in good position to benefit from the trade package in global market due to the economic conditions and economic and social stability. They also gave an insight into the trade package. In the past few years, the EU has not been able to increase its share in the Iranian market. The trade package was not able to enter a new period of possibilities.

On the global trade front, the sentiment is improving, and this is good news for the Iranian economy. The trade package is currently working with half capacity in the country, and it is expected to increase in the near future. The country has been seriously unharmed in the recent years.

During a meeting with the CBI’s head of representation in Europe, the country’s trade officials have expressed their desire to increase trade with the EU and have thus far increased the import of some goods, but currently only a small part of the trade package is active in the country.

The European Union is one of the major export destinations of Iranian dairy products, especially from Iran. The government has also issued a report that the EU is one of the major importers of Iranian dairy products. The government has also expressed its desire to increase the trade package with the EU in the recent years. The 2013 average, 800,000 plus were on the streets of the UK. The number is now down to 100,000. The protests are likely to continue into 2020.

Due to the nature of the protests, the police are not able to count the number of people on the streets. The police estimates the number of people on the streets in London to be at around 100,000.

Adding to the problem is the fact that the police are not able to count the number of people on the streets. The police estimates the number of people on the streets in London to be at around 100,000.

Has India's Narendra Modi gone too far with controversial new citizenship law?

By Tara John

Under Prime Minister Narendra Modi, the Indian government has taken a hard line on matters of autonomy and rolled out a citizenship check in the north-eastern states that has angered officials from those states and people stateless, many of them Muslims.

And while Modi has faced the passage of a controversial new citizenship law, which purports to protect against illegal immigration from Pakistan, Bangladesh and Myanmar, India has also seen protests break out against a new citizenship law that is seen as discriminatory.

In March, demonstrations against the new citizenship law sparked clashes between police and protesters in the capital, New Delhi. The protests turned violent, with police firing tear gas and rubber bullets to disperse the crowds.

The protests were sparked by concerns that the new citizenship law would allow people from Pakistan, Bangladesh and Myanmar, who have lived in India for years, to become citizens, while excluding Muslims from other countries of origin.

The law has been met with widespread condemnation both within India and internationally, with many arguing that it is discriminatory and will lead to further discrimination against Muslims in India.

In response to the protests, the Indian government has defended its policy, arguing that it is necessary to prevent illegal immigration and protect national security.

The protests have also sparked concerns about the safety of Muslims in India, with many fleeing the country to seek refuge elsewhere.

The protests have also put pressure on the government to withdraw the citizenship law, with many calling for a rethink of the policy.

The government has so far maintained its stance, with Modi坚称该法案是对所有印度公民的“正确”政策。

In the face of mounting criticism, the government has moved to tighten its grip on the media, suspending coverage of the protests and blocking social media platforms.

The government has also faced criticism for its handling of the pandemic, with many arguing that it has failed to take adequate measures to control the spread of the virus.

The government has also faced criticism for its handling of the economy, with many arguing that it has failed to address the needs of the poorest and most vulnerable citizens.

Dr. Amir Pourjabbari
No two planets in the Solar System are exactly alike. This means that we need to study them - rocky worlds, Venus, Mercury, Mars - individually. Some of these planets have moons - icy giants Neptune and Uranus; and dwarf planets like Pluto. That sounds pretty diverse, but it's far from the truth. All of these worlds are quite similar in many ways. They're all rocky, have atmospheres, and are surrounded by galaxies.

The yellow feature interrupting the red straight part of the image is called a cosmic candy cane. It's a remnant of a cosmic event that happened billions of years ago. These candies are formed when two galaxies collide and merge, resulting in the formation of new stars and planets.

Scientists have been studying these cosmic candies to better understand the conditions that led to their formation. This research is important because it can help us understand how our own galaxy formed and how other galaxies in the universe are formed.

Astronomers discover a ‘cosmic candy cane’ near the Milky Way’s core

Deep within the central zone of the Milky Way, a bizarre cluster of gas clouds has taken on the unusual form of a gigantic, cosmic candy cane. CNN reports that the observation may help scientists understand the process through which our galaxy forms stars and planets. CNN suggests that this could provide new insights into the formation of our own galaxy.

No one can escape fruit cake for Christmas, even not ISS astronauts in space

The holidays have finally hit a fever pitch, and with Christmas right around the corner, the International Space Station crew of Expedition 61 has already accomplished a lot. The team has already enjoyed some holiday stockings and offer their own perspectives on what it’s been like to celebrate Christmas in space.

The holidays in space will also be a special occasion for the Expedition 61 crew. They will enjoy some hot apple cider and hot cocoa, both of which come in metallic-looking pouches. It might not be fruitcake… but it didn’t work,” Koch bemoans. “We got some anyway.”

300-year-old fossil is early sign of creatures caring for their young

Fossil hunters say they have uncovered the earliest evidence of creatures caring for their young, a behavior that could be seen in many different taxa of organisms. Discovering these early behaviors is important because it helps us understand how they evolved and how life has changed over time.

The fossil found in Nova Scotia, Canada, is thought to be the remains of a super-puff planet with a very low density. These planets are the puffiest known, with densities less than one percent of its mass. Super-puff planets are also known as ice giants and are typically found in the outer regions of the Solar System.

One of the most interesting aspects of these planets is that they don’t have - super-giant worlds. Because of their low density, these planets have a tendency to form a ring of ice around them, which can be seen in the bright red wave in the image. The red wave is due to the presence of water ice and carbon dioxide, which are known to be abundant in the atmospheres of super-puff planets.

The discovery of these super-puff planets is significant because it provides evidence for the existence of ancient life on Earth. This discovery is likely to have a major impact on our understanding of the evolution of life on Earth.

The undeniable beauty, the event’s last gasp of war-time chivalry, aside, it was never to be repeated – not the following Christmas of that war, nor in the interminable global wars that has since followed. Senior officers on both sides, right down to the lowest corporals, had been told by the 1914 dispatch of class and species solidarity, and brutally squashed such cross-truce harmony in order to come, with threats of disciplinary action. So it goes… Nonetheless, as ever, two-fers rage – those longer than the first Great War of old – the time for these fratres in Christ that pass between generations, and thus could’ve been more essential. I know, I know, contemporary wars are geographically diffuse, rife for internationalization and prudential aggrandizement. These bellicose pragmatists do different practices. On the surface, at least, those cavello seem sensible. But are they? What if Americans and Afghans, Iraqis, Syrians, Libyans, Somalia, et al., have more in common than we currently think? And even now – than most assume?

Bowl me over, the notion isn’t as much of a stretch as it may seem. First off, contrary to popular belief, Christians and Muslims worship the same god, if a different flavor of tradition. Figures such as Abraham, King David, Jesus, and, especially Mary, figure prominently in the Koran, Islam, as such, though often distorted – as is war (and is) in certain bellwether strata of Christianity – is best seen as an extension, or addition, to the Judeo-Christian tradition, rather than a unique religion. Furthermore, the grunts on either side of America’s ‘terror wars’ still share extraordinary communalities.

Both are often drawn to military service by the limited economic opportunities in their respective societies. The soldiers who served under me typically joined as a matter of fact and not of necessity, though for a trade, or seeking healthcare and housing security. The foot soldiers in the Taliban buried EIDs and laid in wait to ambush my troops, as often as not, for a steady paycheck, a sense of dignity and purpose in a circumnavigating world, one where marks were placed on Arab and Muslim grunts, for grants, example, share more than they divide. Both are often drawn to violence of one form or another. The grunts of Jesus, in a sense, share the same clear path to victory; neither count many prospects in their future. The simple fact of Jesus being a profound matter. The same can be said of the antagonists across America’s wars today. Let them all lay down their arms, for a moment, and celebrate in solidarity this Christmas.

Ability of re-grown Amazon forest to combat climate change ‘vastly overestimated’, study suggests

The capacity of re-grown areas of the Amazon rainforest to draw carbon dioxide from the atmosphere and mitigate climate change may have been ‘vastly overestimated’, scientists fear.

The forest is a major source of greenhouse gases, researchers accept. But new studies suggest re-grown areas of the rainforest may not be as effective at combating climate change as previously assumed.

“Scientists have been estimating the contribution of re-grown areas of the Amazon rainforest to mitigating climate change,” said Dr. John Rowell, lead author of the study.

“However, our research suggests this contribution may be much smaller than previously thought.”

Iran ranks first in international abacus contest 2019

TEHRAN — Iranian students won a gold medal at the 18th PAMA Global Abacus and Mental Arithmetic Championships held in Malaysia on December 30, 2019.

Different countries, including Taiwan, Thailand, Cambodia, Hong Kong, the United States, South Africa, Vietnam, South Korea, Lebanon, Saudi Arabia, Australasian India, Russia, China, Kazakhstan, the United Arab Emirates, Uzbekistan, Egypt, Pakistan, and Yemen, attended the international competition.

The championship, organised by a non-profit organisation established in 1999, is an example of what can be achieved through international competition.

The event aimed to hold a fully integrated invention fair providing inventions from all over the world and reinforce the importance of the invention fair for the protection of intellectual property information, and technology transfer.

Two Iranian teams consisting of school students and college students competed in the event. Shariati High School and Adel Ahmadi Faniemi won the gold medals among school students, and Amir-Alboh Mohammad-Koushki, head of the Iranian team students, accepted the award.

The students’ innovative project was “smart depression detection system using artificial intelligence” which ranked first surpassing South Korea, the United States and Germany, he noted.

The college students’ team was awarded “black chain system in medical information technology” which aims to eliminate insurance hurdles in healthcare, said Mohammad-Koushki.

New species of monkey found in Amazon rainforest

Scientists researching a group of fluffy grey monkeys in the Amazon forest have determined the animals belong to a new species.

The primates, named Plectureuropotes panamensis, were first discovered by biologists more than 100 years ago but have only very recently been recognised as a distinct group.

The species lives on the Paez island in Rondônia, Brazil, and has survived deforestation because the peninsula’s steep sides make it difficult to access.

Biologists originally thought the monkeys were part of the “saki black tit” species when they were discovered in 1914.

However, Adrian Barnett, a biologist who was working on confirming the new species, told the New Scientist that a report by the researcher who first discovered the monkeys showed he was “clearly in doubt” about their classification.

The Parecis monkeys, which are known as “oto?ho?” by local indigenous people, are distinguished from the dark grey saki black tit by their brownish back and white patches on their cheeks.

Researchers have argued the new species of monkeys should be considered “near threatened” under the criteria set out by the IUCN Red List for endangered species.

He added that the Parecis-monkey was the third new species found in Brazil this year and the 20th monkey species discovered there since 2010.

Marcelle Messias, a biologist who worked on the research project after coming across the new species in 2011, was also involved in the discovery of the Munduruku marmoset in the southeastern Amazon earlier this year.

Mr Barnett said the new discoveries may have to be described for deforestation making access to parts of the Amazon easier.

“Once about deforestation is that it gives everyone access to remote areas, so sometimes scientists get to areas that have never been properly explored just before the chairmen,” he said.

Russia will closely monitor new U.S. missile deployments in Europe & Asia-Pacific

Moscow will monitor the potential deployment of American short- and medium-range ballistic missiles in Europe and the Asia-Pacific region. In Europe, the United States has already deployed some U.S. medium-range ballistic missiles in Romania and Poland. In Asia-Pacific, the deployment of U.S. high-tech weapons in the Philippines and Japan will also be under Moscow's close watch. "We will monitor any new deployments in Europe and Asia-Pacific region, including the deployment of short- and medium-range missiles," Russian Foreign Minister Sergei Lavrov said. Moscow's statements come after U.S. President Donald Trump's recent decision to withdraw the United States from the Intermediate-Range Nuclear Forces (INF) Treaty. Moscow has accused the United States of violating the treaty and has threatened to follow suit if Washington continues its missile deployments in Europe and Asia-Pacific. "We have always been against the ratification and implementation of those types of arms, but we will monitor the situation closely," Lavrov said. "Any new deployments in Europe and Asia-Pacific will require a thorough analysis and monitoring by our intelligence services."

Rangers boss Gerrard wants 'severe example' made of bottle thrower

Rangers manager Steven Gerrard has urged Scottish football authorities to make a “severe example” of bottle-throwing supporters who marred an Old Firm derby.

He added: “I would like to thank Vincenzo Montella for the assistance that he provided us with. Unfortunately, Vincenzo was released from his position there.”

The coach had been appointed in 2017 to replace the sacked Paulo Fonseca, and Montella initially seemed to have turned the Tuscan side around. He was dismissed in April 2018 after a run of 12 games without a win.

He said: “We've got a great young player in the way that we're playing, and he's influencing the team.”

Spor Toto — After a three-week scramble, Andrea Stramaccioni has not yet returned to Iran to lead his beloved team Esteghlal and two parties find themselves trapped with an unsolved issue.

Drinking and partying can be a tricky concept in a country with strict restrictions on alcohol consumption, public places or at the stadium. According to fans, the feedback is likely to be a mix of reassurance about their infrastructure but concerns about the ‘fun factor’.

Stramaccioni had said he would return to Iran if he had received his payment. We don’t know what the problem is,” Ali Fahdabakhsh, a member of Esteghlal board of directors, said.

Due to such problems, Esteghlal had never asked Esteghlal to increase his wage. Stramaccioni has demanded Esteghlal’s officials stop lying. The Inter Milan coach has recently published a post on his Instagram account he has reportedly led to the partial closure of multiple bank accounts, belonging to several individuals in Europe. This reportedly led to the partial closure of Esteghlal’s bank account in Italy over money laundering charges.

Stramaccioni had requested part of his unpaid salary after the reprimand of Hong Kong supporters after a goalless draw with Sepahan in a match of the Iranian Super League.

Ashkan Dejagah poured cold water on their chances of levelling the match in the 72nd minute. Stramaccioni’s thick walls of distrust toward Esteghlal will only make things worse for two sides.
